Diamond Are Girls' Best Friends

The famous Broadway performance has given birth to the catch phrase: "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," which has still not lost its actuality in our days. Being aware of the common belief that diamonds are the best friends of all the girls on the planet, the representatives of the fair sex themselves, often deny this. If the diamonds are viewed by men as the only means to deserve a woman's love, then the gentlemen are totally wrong – in the vast majority of cases. The women of the modern era care more of their career, social position and financial independence, than of priceless jewelry they can be presented. Some women even say that such expensive presents, as gold, diamonds or other precious gems, may tie them and force to act in a certain manner with them men. Thus, they say, they do need neither diamonds nor other precious presents, since there love is not for money.

To find out whether the quote is true or not, there has been conducted a survey among women of various ages. The only question asked was as follows: "Are diamonds the girls' best friends?" The opinions expressed very diverse and contradictory, here are juts a few of them:

Amalia, New York, 45 y.o.

"Diamonds and gold rings have never been my passion indeed. I have always preferred to be dressed casually, wearing high heels and glamorous fonts only on special occasions (which are not too often in my life). Nevertheless, I love when my husband makes expensive presents just to say he loves me again. It is definitely not diamonds to become the best friends of the girls, though they may become the the girls' beloved items for years.”

Jean, Ottawa, 16 y.o.

“I just love, love, love fancy dresses and hard parties all night long in the luxurious night clubs of my city! I have never been presented a diamond, though I own one – inherited from my grandmother. I wish I had be given a huge ring or earrings with the diamond one day by my beloved man! I would be on the cloud number nine, I am sure this is the best present a girl could dream of.”

Irine, Budapest, 26 y.o.

“I have lots of jewelries and I love every item, I am just so excited once I wear a ring or diadem on a special occasion, or simply put a small pendant in the office. My boyfriend has recently presented my the new diamond and it is extremely beautiful. Still, I do not think that the diamonds and other chase play such an important role in my day-by-day living, they rather decorate the routine, which is nice and pleasant.”

Cathryn, Oslo, 61 y.o.

“I have lived the major part of my life not possessing the precious jewelry, since none of my husbands had enough money to coddle me with one. It was only on my 60th birthday when my family presented my a beautiful ring with the unsurpassed diamond. I have fallen in love with it from the first sight. My opinion is simple: you may spend the whole life without even knowing how a diamond sparkles, though it is the 'must' for every man to trifle his woman with at least one diamond – every woman is worth it!”

As it can be judged from the various opinions, diamonds play a far more inconsiderable role in the lives of women, than it is considered by the authors of the Broadway song. True, every woman should have something to admire, to feast eyes on during the daily routine. And it is definitely the responsibility of a man to present this delight to a woman. In the rapid pace of the modern living, women are often even more stronger and indulgent than men, which means they bear even more independence and power. Nevertheless, every woman – deep in her mind – desires to be 'tamed', loved and admired.
