Monsters Living Under the Bed

There is a common belief that some of little children have a fear of going to bed – there are giant monsters swarming under their little beds. They are often referred to as the “monsters living in the closet” or “domestic monsters”. As the contrast to the wide-spread belief, it may be stated that these monsters are not scary, in fact. They may become the children’s best friends and even their teachers and co-players in numerous amusements. At times, there is one and only monster dwelling under the child’s bed, though sometimes the whole huge monster-family occupies the empty space in the room – with all their distant relatives and even friends paying a social visit for weekends. No matter how numerous such extra-residents of the nursery may be, they will never do harm to its owner – the little boy or girl, or even twins. The secret of living peacefully together with these monsters is easy as ABC. The present paper is aimed at discussing the most common ways of avoiding the conflicts with the monsters living under the child’s bed – they will help both parents and children to live amicable with these creatures.

First of all, it is crucial to remember that monsters living under the bed are not malicious or cruel; on the contrary, they are very children-friendly and even sweet if treated in the proper way. The monsters will never touch a child and would speak to them only on extraordinary occasions. Moreover, the monsters will be eagerly helping children to clean the room or find the toys or cloths. If the child gets so lucky and tames the monster, then he will be ensured with the most breath-catching fairy-tales and the sweetest dreams ever, all nights long. The monsters are the best story-tellers on the whole Earth. They know thousands of games and your child will never get bored with the monster (though parents may sometimes think that the children are playing on their own, not with the monsters – no surprise, since monsters stay invisible for the grown-ups under any condition).

Second of all, it should be also noted that monsters are very neat and tidy neighbors; they commit no nuisance and always practice proper hygiene, so the nursery will be devoid of any unpleasant smell or extra-garbage. The only thing that may betray the presence of the monster under the kid’s bed is the almost invisible fell hair, though these may easily pass for cat one. Since the monsters do not need to eat a lot, they will never steal the pocket money from the child. Once a child suddenly runs into the monster at night, the monster never cries or roars – he sends a slight dream to the child and – voila! The kids remembers nothing in the morning.

As it can be noticed, monsters living under the kid's bed are very cooperative and will hardly interfere into the life of the children. The latter very soon learn how to live in positive terms with the monsters, and the mutual friendship will not keep both sides waiting. Parents should not be worries, since the friendly relations with the under-bed monsters will do a power of good for both the kids and the monsters.
